Jury finds Jasper man guilty of child molesting

A Jasper man arrested in May of 2021 and charged with child molesting and public voyeurism was found guilty last Thursday by a Dubois Circuit Court jury.

Joshua T. Govea, 32, was arrested on May 4, 2021, following an investigation into acts of child molesting and public voyeurism that allegedly occurred at an apartment in Jasper. The investigation began when a ten-year-old girl disclosed to school personnel that Govea had touched her inappropriately; the child later disclosed her belief that Govea had photographed her while she was sleeping. The investigation was led by Detective Greg Brescher of the Jasper Police Department.

Jurors were selected last Monday, evidence was heard on Tuesday and Wednesday, and closing arguments were presented on Thursday before the case was given to jurors for their consideration. After less than an hour of deliberation, jurors found Govea guilty on all counts: Child Molesting as a Level 1 felony, Child Molesting as a Level 4 felony; and Public Voyeurism as a Class A misdemeanor.

Deputy Prosecutor Brian Lucchi commented, "it took many people and entities, working together, to bring Mr. Govea to justice, including Detective Brescher, school personnel, and the Southwestern Indiana Child Advocacy Center Coalition. But above all, it took an unflinching young girl who chose to go through the ordeal of testifying at jury trial, rather than allow Mr. Govea to get away with what he had done."

After Thursday's verdict, Judge Nathan Verkamp remanded Govea to the Dubois County Security Center, awaiting sentencing. The Court has set sentencing for June 23 at 1:00 PM. Govea faces between 20 and 40 years in prison.

Vietnam Veterans Memorial Moving Wall in Lawrence

"The Moving Wall," a ½ scale replica of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C, was on display this past weekend at the Memorial Park in Lawrence.

The Wall arrived May 31 and held its opening ceremony on Saturday, June 2 according to Mike Hamm, past president of Vietnam Veterans of America Chapter 295, who also serves as site director.

"We originally planned on bringing The Wall to its usual location on the south end of Lawton Loop," Hamm said, "but the homeowners association there had already scheduled an event for that weekend so we asked the Reuse Authority for another location in the area and they accommodated us by giving us the use of Memorial Park.

"It's a great location just south of the Fort Harrison YMCA with plenty of parking nearby," Hamm concluded.

According to Hamm, the opening ceremony included a concert by the Crossroads of America Scout Band followed by blessings by several religions including native Americans and a flyover by Vietnam-era helicopters. The formal dedication, started at 2 p.m.

Speakers included Air Force Maj. Gen. Mark A. Pilar, who flew 90 combat missions in Vietnam, and Army Maj. Gen. James T. Jackson, Director of tThe United States of America Vietnam War Commemoration.

The Wall was on display until June 4 when it was dismantled for transport.

The event was free and open to the public.

Limestone Fest celebrates stone heritage

"Millions of years ago, Indiana looked something like this," Dr. Todd Thompson told the audience, who had come to Bloomington from around the state to attend a convention. "That's a photo of the Bahamas," he said, and everyone laughed.

They clearly thought he was kidding, but he wasn't. About 340 million years ago, the land now known as Indiana was, in fact, 15 degrees south of the equator and covered by a warm, shallow sea. The sand, made of calcite, was ground-up fossil debris – a "death assemblage," Thompson called it, prompting more chuckles.

But that's what limestone is: marine fossils ground into sand-sized grains and compressed into stone over millions of years. You might just see a smooth slab of stone, but geologists see the microscopic creatures and geologic processes that created Indiana's world-famous limestone beds.

IGWS Director Todd Thompson talks about limestone with Indiana Lions Club convention attendees. | Sara Clifford, IGWS

Thompson, state geologist and director of the Indiana Geological and Water Survey (IGWS), gives this sort of presentation fairly often, as do Education and Outreach Coordinator Polly Sturgeon and Indiana Limestone Institute Executive Director Todd Schnatzmeyer. More of them tend to happen in or around June, which is celebrated as Limestone Month in Monroe and Lawrence counties.

On Saturday, June 17, the IGWS will bring together limestone experts and enthusiasts from all over the Limestone belt to celebrate Limestone Fest on the IU Bloomington campus. From 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., families and visitors of all ages are encouraged to visit booths and learn about the region's limestone heritage, what karst is and how caves form, and where to find great hiking and biking attractions thanks to this area's geology. Kids can play games and make fossil-themed crafts, and will love visiting the IGWS's Learning Lab to pull open drawers of rocks, minerals, and fossils. Artisan Experience will offer limestone carving for $25 per piece, and several other arts-, nature- and history-themed organizations will offer activities and information.

Limestone Fest is headquartered in the Northwest Quad on Cottage Grove Avenue; free parking will be available in the Forrest Avenue garage.

The purpose of this event, now in its second year, is to draw greater awareness to the regional impact of this unique natural resource which visitors or newcomers might not notice.

"Limestone connects so many aspects of people's lives," Sturgeon told the group at the Monroe County Convention Center last month. "Of course, we have the geology, and it's very fascinating to think of Indiana as it was 340 million years ago. But we also have a genealogical and historical connection. So many people in this region have family members who either did work or still work in quarries in the limestone industry. I live in a limestone house right across from a quarry, so my own personal history is being built within a limestone foundation."

Limestone also affects the area's recreational opportunities. "Of course, we have all these caves that were eroded down into the limestone. The hills of this beautiful countryside here are all because of that limestone bedrock," Sturgeon said. "And it also affects just who we are as a people, because we live inside this built environment made out of Indiana limestone."

Up to 75 percent of the limestone buildings in North America originated in the Indiana stone belt. That history and heritage grew from the foundational scientific work of geologists.

"I really can't think of any other natural material from such a limited area that has such widespread use," Sturgeon said.

IGWS Education and Outreach Coordinator Polly Sturgeon talks about limestone heritage. The quote on the slide says, "We have under our feet the best building material God ever put on this Earth. Because of that fact, this industry is as nearly eternal as you can get. One hundred years from now, people will still be hauling limestone out of this little patch of ground. They may be shipping it on spaceships and light rays, but one way or another they'll be hauling it out of the ground and stacking it into the air." -- Bill McDonald, former executive director of the Indiana Limestone Institute, in Limestone Country, 1985. | Sara Clifford, IGWS

Summer safety tips

Summer is synonymous with relaxation and fun in the sun. The easygoing nature of summer can make it easy to overlook safety concerns that run the gamut from heat-related illnesses to bug bites to water play injuries. Though no one wants to rain on their own summer parade, keeping these safety tips in mind can ensure the coming months are as safe as they are fun.

• Safeguard against the threat of heat-related illnesses. Sizzling summer days pose a significant threat if the proper measures aren't take to avoid heat-related illnesses. According to the National Safety Council, heat exhaustion, which occurs when the body loses excessive water and salt, and heat stroke, which the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention notes is marked by the body's inability to control its temperature, can escalate rapidly. The NSC identifies individuals who work outdoors, infants and young children, people who are 65 and older, people who are ill, and people who are overweight as those most at risk of heat-related illnesses. Such illnesses are entirely preventable, and the CDC recommends remaining indoors in air conditioned rooms, drinking plenty of fluids but avoiding alcohol, wearing loose and lightweight clothing as well as a hat, and replacing salt lost from sweating by drinking fruit juice or sports drinks.

• Apply sunscreen. Long days in the summer sun may be a great way to relax, but it's imperative that individuals apply sunscreen before going outside and then reapply it throughout the day as necessary. Sunburn is not only unpleasant, it also increases a person's risk for skin cancer and affects the body's ability to cool itself, which can increase the risk for heat stroke.

• Protect against mosquitoes. Mosquitoes are more than a mere nuisance. Mosquitoes can carry an assortment of viruses, including Zika virus and West Nile virus. And though such viruses are often thought of as a problem for people in faraway lands, the NSC notes that the Aedes mosquito, which is a known transmitter of the Zika virus, has appeared in various regions of the globe, including the continental United States and popular vacation destinations like Mexico and Central and South America. The NSC recommends that everyone, and especially individuals who work outdoors, apply mosquito repellant before going outside and to continue to do so as necessary throughout the day. In addition, clothing treated with the insecticide permethrin may help to repel mosquitoes.

• Exercise caution around water. The CDC reports that drowning is the leading cause of unintentional death for children between the ages of one and four. Though children might be most vulnerable to water-related accidents and death, adults also must exercise caution when around the water. The NSC recommends individuals avoid the water, be it in a lake, river, ocean, or pool, unless they know how to swim. Individuals also should never swim alone and only swim in areas supervised by a lifeguard. When swimming at a private residence, children should never be allowed to swim unless an adult is supervising. Adults also should avoid alcohol when swimming.

Summer is a season to relax, but it's also a season when safety should be a top priority for people of all ages.

Hydrating is key to summer safety

Summer is a season to enjoy some fun in the sun, but it's imperative that people remember to take steps to reduce their risk for heat illness. Those measures should include efforts to hydrate and remain hydrated throughout the day. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention report that water will almost always help people remain hydrated even when they're working in the heat. But food also plays a vital role in preventing heat illness, as the CDC notes eating regular meals can help to replace the salt lost through sweat. It's also important that individuals avoid energy drinks and alcohol when spending time in the hot summer sun. Many energy drinks contain more caffeine than standard servings of coffee, tea and soft drinks, and excessive caffeine consumption can contribute to dehydration. The same can be said for alcohol, and the CDC reports that consuming alcohol within 24 hours of working in the heat can increase the risk of heat illness.

It's Tick Time!!

How tick savvy are you? Learn all you want to know about ticks and maybe even more!

The Friends of the Patoka River National Wildlife Refuge will host Southern Medical Entomologist Doug Ginder to share with you his knowledge on ticks and other insect vectors in our area. The program will be held on Wednesday, June 7 at 6 pm CST at the Princeton Public Library.

Mr Ginder has been doing research for the past couple of years in the Refuge area and is investigating to determine if there is a range of extension of a new tick born disease. He will cover all the species of ticks in the area and diseases that they transmit. He will also talk about ways to avoid ticks.

Time is "ticking" so don't miss this opportunity to learn all about ticks!

Summer activities for families to enjoy together

Summer is one of the most popular seasons of the year. After several months of chilly temperatures in many regions, summer provides a welcome reprieve from the cold.

Moderate temperatures makes it much more comfortable and inviting to venture outdoors, particularly for families with children who might not adapt to the cold as well as adults. The following are some family-friendly activities that make the most of summer renewal.

Visit botanic gardens

If there's a botanical garden nearby, a visit in summer is a great time to soak in the beauty of nature. That's because an abundance of flowers bloom during the summer, meaning a garden will be in peak form. Visitors can meander through rows of rose bushes or tour the labyrinth of trimmed hedges. Beautiful, flowering cherry trees, with their delicate pink or white petals, also are sights to behold in summer.

Prepare a home garden

Visiting a garden is one thing, creating one at home is another. In addition to planning a vegetable garden to enjoy tasty pickings throughout summer, you can devote some property to flowers that will attract wildlife. Check with a garden center about which flowers and plants attract butterflies and other beneficial insects. Many garden centers sell butterfly and hummingbird mixes to attract wildlife.

Go animal watching

Flowers are not the only thing on display come the summer. Many animals, including birds, are born this time of year. Baby animals are not only adorable, they can be entertaining to watch grow. Families can spend time viewing the animals that visit their yards or surrounding parks, being careful to keep their distance. Adults may be quite protective of their young, so it's better to watch from the lens of a camera or with binoculars. Always resist the urge to help a baby animal who seems like it was abandoned. The parent may be a short distance away gathering food or trying to avoid drawing attention to the young to deter predators.

Get out on the water

A bright, warm day is an ideal time to enjoy the open water. Summer is a season when many marinas reopen and avid boaters put their vessels back into the water. You also can venture into streams or lakes aboard kayaks or canoes, getting exercise and seeing the scenery in the process. Bring a fishing pole along and cast it into the water for a few hours of recreation.

Make wind chimes

Enhance the garden or decor around the home by making wind chimes or other percussion items that can create beautiful music when summer breezes blow. Commercially available kits are sold, but wind chimes also can be made from items like bamboo or even strung shells.

These are just a few family-friendly activities to enjoy this summer.

Keep summer days fun and busy when camp ends

Many adults have fond memories of attending summer camp when they were children. The American Camp Association reports that each year more than 14 million children and adults take advantage of the camp experience. Summer camp is a place for kids to learn new skills, make new friends, experience being away from home for extended periods of time, and explore new locales.

Summer camp program lengths vary. Some children attend local camps that may last a week or two, while others attend sleep-away camps that last a little longer. Since summer vacation typically lasts between eight to 10 weeks, parents may discover there still is plenty of downtime after summer camp ends. Here are some ways to fill the gap between the end of camp and the start of a new school year.

Schedule a vacation

What better way to keep the magic of summer going than by rolling summer camp right into a family vacation? Give kids time to enjoy a few days to relax at home, but then buckle up for the next adventure. This can be a trip away from home, or a series of day trips or activities guided by all members of the family.

Organize a sleepover exchange

Parents of school-aged children can coordinate with one another to fill up a week or more with sleepovers. Each family can take a night or two, and the kids can jump from house to house extending the fun with one another. Sleepovers can occur inside the home or under tents in the yard.

Recreate favorite camp activities at home

Why not take what makes camp entertaining and try it at home? Copy the camp's itinerary and engage in similar activities, such as canoeing or nature hikes. On nights when the weather cooperates, everyone can gather around a fire pit to roast marshmallows.

Enroll in a recreational program

Some towns offer free or low-fee activities to residents through their parks and recreation departments. If budgeting does not allow for a camp experience, there are likely town-wide activities that can fill the gaps until it's time for children to go back to school. Some even may offer after-hours childcare options for parents who have scheduling conflicts with work.

When summer camp ends, parents have different options they can explore to keep children engaged and supervised until a new school year begins.

STATE NEWS

Indiana state legislator arrested on suspicion of drunken driving

SEYMOUR, Ind. (AP) — A state lawmaker from southern Indiana was arrested early Wednesday on suspicion of drunken driving after crashing his vehicle at an Interstate 65 interchange and leaving the scene, state police said.

Republican Rep. Jim Lucas of Seymour was booked into the Jackson County Jail on preliminary charges that include driving while intoxicated and leaving the scene of a crash with property damage.

Lucas, who was first elected to the Legislature in 2012, is a prominent supporter of loosening state gun laws and marijuana legalization. He has faced controversy several times for what critics called racist social media posts, including in 2020 when he posted a meme that showed black children in diapers dancing with the caption, "We gon' get free money!"

His legislative office didn't immediately respond to a request for comment about his arrest. A spokeswoman for Republican House Speaker Todd Huston said he would not be commenting on "Lucas' personal matter."

Police were called soon after midnight Wednesday about a vehicle crashing into a guardrail at the I-65 and Indiana 11 interchange just north of Seymour, state police spokesman Sgt. Stephen Wheeles said. That vehicle was found on the north side of Seymour with heavy damage and officers stopped Lucas as he was walking nearby, Wheeles said.

Lucas was arrested after troopers conducted sobriety tests and results on blood tests for his intoxication level were not yet available, he said.

Southern Indiana police officer, suspect hospitalized after shooting each other

NEW ALBANY, Ind. (AP) — A southern Indiana police officer and a suspect shot each other, leaving injuries that were not life-threatening Tuesday morning, authorities said.

Cpl. Andrew Byrne was taken to University of Louisville Hospital in nearby Kentucky "and he is expected to recover," the New Albany Police Department posted on Facebook.

"The suspect in this case was also shot and wounded as Cpl. Byrne returned fire after being attacked," the post said.

The suspect, Barry Sowders, 29, of New Albany, has been charged with three counts of attempted murder and resisting law enforcement, the post said. He was treated and released at a Louisville hospital and was awaiting extradition back to Indiana, the post said.

Byrne was "in good spirits," New Albany Mayor Jeff Gahan said on Facebook.

Indiana State Police said the incident began with a shot fired at a female.

State police Sgt. Carey Huls said there was a brief foot chase after police located the suspect.

"As officers pursued, Sowders fired a handgun at two officers, striking Corporal Andrew Byrne. Corporal Byrne then returned fire, striking Sowders," Huls said.

"The officer returned fire and struck the suspect. The suspect escaped to a nearby residence ... he was taken into custody and rushed to the hospital."

Indiana Conservation offers hold memorial and awards ceremony

A ceremony was held last week to remember fallen Indiana Conservation Officers and recognize current officers for their excellence while serving the state and its citizens.

The seven members of the Department of Natural Resources Division of Law Enforcement who have died in the line of duty since its inception in 1911 were honored in the Indiana Government Center auditorium in Indianapolis. Those officers, listed with their end of watch date, are Sgt. Ed Bollman, Feb. 13, 2018; F/Sgt. Karl E. Kelley, April 17, 1998; Officer Thomas Deniston, Oct. 16, 1990; Officer James D. Indiana conservation officers are law enforcement officers for the DNR, and the DNR Division of Law Enforcement is the oldest Indiana state law enforcement agency. A total of 214 conservation officers serve the state.

After the memorial ceremony, the division recognized current individual officers for their outstanding service.

District 6 Officer Nick Wilson, assigned to Hendricks County, was selected as the James D. Pitzer Indiana Conservation Officer of the Year. The award recognizes Wilson as the top officer of 2022, as selected from the 10 district officer of the year recipients.

The recipient demonstrates professional ethics, attitude, and service to the public while demonstrating dedication to the principles of the conservation of natural resources and the enforcement of laws affecting the department. The officer must also demonstrate the ability to provide a positive influence, develop camaraderie within the ranks, and gain the confidence and respect of fellow officers.

Sgt. Pete Slavin received the Director's Leadership Award for his work overseeing officers in operational district 5 in the western portion of the state and assisting with field training new officers.

District 3 Officer Jarred Coffing was recognized by the National Association of State Boating Law Administrators (NASBLA) as the state's Boating Enforcement Officer of the Year and for his leadership in boating education.

District 2 Officer Nathan Cooper was presented with the 2022 Waterfowl Protection Officer of the Year award for his enforcement of waterfowl regulations and his related performance in public education and community interaction.

Conservation Officer Hunter Law of district 1 was honored with a Life Saving Award for his exceptional actions that resulted in the saving of a life.

How to establish fitness goals for kids

Physical activity benefits people of all ages, including kids. Despite widespread recognition of the positive impact physical activity has on children, many kids are not getting enough exercise. In an analysis of data collected as part od the 2019 Youth Risk Behavior Survey, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found that less than one in four children between the ages of six and 17 participates in 60 minutes of physical activity per day.

When established in childhood and adolescence, good habits like exercising regularly can set young people up for a long, healthy life. Perhaps in recognition of that, parents often look for ways to promote physical activity to their youngsters. Setting fitness goals is one way to help young people exercise more, and the following are a handful of strategies parents can try as they seek to promote a love of physical activity in their children.

• Include fun activities in a fitness plan. Adults recognize the importance of planning when aspiring to achieve certain goals, and a plan can be just as integral to getting kids to be more physically active. When devising a fitness plan, parents should be sure to include activities kids find fun. Just because Dad liked playing baseball doesn't mean his children will. Identify activities that kids enjoy, whether it's hiking or cycling or playing an organized sport, and include that in the fitness plan.

• Involve kids' friends. Parents often make exercising a family affair, but a 2015 study led by a researcher affiliated with Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center found that children who exercised with friends were far less likely to cite barriers such as lack of enjoyment or lack of energy as reasons for not exercising. In essence, kids are more inspired to exercise with friends than they are with family members. When establishing fitness goals for kids, parents can work with other parents so kids can pursue those goals together, increasing the chances that those pursuits will be successful.

• Set aside time to exercise each day. Physical activity should be part of everyone's daily routine, and kids are no exception. Such activity does not need to be a grueling workout, and indeed children's bodies will need time to recover after especially strenuous exercise. But setting aside time each day to be physically active is a good way to ensure kids' lifestyles are not predominantly sedentary.

• Make the goals attainable. Parents may know before kids begin exercising or notice shortly after they start being more physically active how much kids can reasonably handle. The YMCA notes that's an important factor to consider, as fitness goals should be attainable so anyone adjusting to a new regimen, even kids, stays motivated. A child's pediatrician can advise on how much exercise youngsters should get each day, and parents can help kids gradually reach that point by setting challenging but attainable goals.

Regular physical activity can benefit kids for the rest of their lives. Parents can pitch in by embracing various strategies to help kids establish attainable goals that make fitness fun.

Melon

Melon is our longest cat resident at DCHS! This girl is the LAST cat in one of our free roaming rooms. Although she's loving having the space all to herself, she really wants a family to call her own.

This is her all cuddled up with one of her favorite volunteers and this particular volunteer sponsored her adoption fee in hopes it would help her find her people!

Melon would prefer a quite home without other cats or young children. One where she she could bird watch and get all the lovins that she wants!

Five Benedictine monks at Saint Meinrad Archabbey, St. Meinrad, IN, observed anniversaries of monastic profession in May. Fr. Ephrem Carr and Fr. Noël Mueller reached their 60th anniversaries of monastic profession, while Fr. Guy Mansini and Br. Jacob Grisley marked their 50th anniversaries of monastic profession and Fr. Joseph Cox celebrated his 25th anniversary. They were honored during Mass on Sunday, May 28.

Fr. Ephrem, a native of Toledo, OH, professed his monastic vows on August 15, 1963, and was ordained a priest on September 24, 1967. He received a licentiate in Eastern Church studies in 1970 from the Pontifical Oriental Institute in Rome. In 1978, he received his doctorate in theology from Sant'Anselmo in Rome.

In addition to teaching at Saint Meinrad from 1970-78 and 1981-87, he served as academic dean of the School of Theology for six years. He also served as subprior (third in leadership) of the monastery from 1978-86.

Fr. Ephrem was on the faculty at Pontifical Athenaeum Sant'Anselmo from 1986-2013, where he taught courses in Oriental liturgy, Oriental monasticism and Syriac. From 2008-12, he served as president of the Pontifical Institute of Liturgy in Rome.

After serving on the faculty of Institutum Liturgicum in London, England, he has returned to the monastery. Fr. Ephrem is also the author and editor of many books and scholarly articles.

Fr. Noël is a native of Louisville, KY, and he professed his monastic vows on August 15, 1963. He was ordained a priest on September 22, 1968.

From 1969 to 1980, he served at Saint Meinrad's mission in Huaraz, Peru, teaching English and religion and serving as coordinator of both the Office of Liturgy and the Office of Marriage Encounter in the Diocese of Huaraz, as well as other duties.

He earned a master's degree in English literature from the University of Louisville in 1985 and taught for 13 years at Saint Meinrad College. He has also served as monastery guest master, and as associate director of continuing education and the associate dean for housing and food services for the School of Theology.

Other assignments have included secretary to the archabbot, seminary formation dean, spiritual director and retreat director.

Fr. Guy, a native of Indianapolis, IN, professed his vows as a Benedictine monk on August 24, 1973. He was ordained to the priesthood on May 1, 1977.

He graduated from Saint Meinrad College in 1972 with a bachelor's degree in philosophy. He earned a Master of Divinity from Saint Meinrad in 1977, a master's in philosophy from Marquette University in 1978, a master's in religious studies from Indiana University in 1976, and a doctorate in theology from Gregorian University in 1984.

Fr. Guy taught for many years at Saint Meinrad College and Saint Meinrad Seminary and School of Theology. Currently, he is the Max Seckler Chair of Theology at Ave Maria University. He also serves as the abbey forester.

Fr. Guy also is the author of Promising and the Good, The Word Has Dwelt Among Us: Explorations in Theology, and Ecclesiology (Sacra Doctrina).

Br. Jacob grew up in Indianapolis, IN. He professed his vows on August 24, 1973. He holds a bachelor's degree in chemistry from Saint Meinrad College.

For many years, Br. Jacob has worked in information technology for the Archabbey, doing computer programming, systems analysis and support work. Other assignments have included assistant novice and junior master for the monastery, director of candidates, choirmaster, and secretary to both the Archabbot's Council and the Monastic Chapter.

In addition to his work in computer services, he is the director of transportation.

Fr. Joseph, a native of Bloomington-Normal, IL, earned a bachelor's degree in international business from Quincy University and a Master of Divinity from Saint Meinrad School of Theology. He was ordained a priest on May 25, 1991, for the Diocese of Peoria, where he served as assistant pastor and pastor in parishes until 1997.

In 1997, Fr. Joseph joined the monastery at Saint Meinrad and made his first profession of vows on August 6, 1998. He then earned a master's degree in library science from Indiana University.

He is the subprior (third in leadership) of the monastery, library cataloger in the Archabbey Library, and chaplain for the Benedictine Oblate community. Previously, he served as secretary for the Archabbot's Council and the Monastic Chapter and as assistant refectorian.
